

What could you do with 51 more days* before you need to pay your suppliers?

An RBC® credit card program can improve your working capital so you can invest more in your business.

Control

Insights

Rewards

Make oversight easy

- Order and cancel your own cards
- Set individual limits and pool corporate credit in real-time
- Block purchases from certain merchant types

Knowledge that helps keep you agile

- Analyze spending patterns to enhance forecasting
- Streamline expense tracking and customize reporting
- Integrate data with expense management systems

Assemble the program that fits best

- Choose a payment option that rewards you for spending
- Earn cash back or rewards for travel and merchandise
- Corporate or individual point ownership options

Companies in your industry use their RBC credit card program for:
Raw materials • Operating equipment • Shipment costs
Maintenance, service and repairs • Travel and sales expenses

Talk to your account manager about the best solution to put your cash management in the fast track.

* 51 more days refers to the maximum number of interest-free days before you must pay your RBC credit card after a purchase is made (based on a card with a 21 day grace period). To achieve this you must use your credit card to pay your supplier and ensure the payment is posted immediately after your statement closes. For more information about interest-free days and the timing of payments, speak with your account manager.